I've just got my test amd64 installation running with a i386 chroot. I'm now trying out Xavier Grave's builds of the GNAT compiler, with more robust Annex E support. As has been discussed here, Glade 2006 is a long way from working properly. If all is well, I should have mixed 32-bit and 64-bit partitions running together in "production" software under Etch in the next few weeks.

Thanks for the update, and thanks also for the nice release notes you wrote for the gnat-glade package. You can now brag about how they are they are on the Debian CDs and DVDs and shipped as part of a stable distribution :) (for those interested, see /usr/share/doc/gnat-glade/README.Debian after upgrading to Etch.)
