

Re: [OT] Paging Frank K. (was: 'Re: [OT] Why Bush?')

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Assembler/alt.lang.asm/2004-11/0613.html>

From: The©Wannabee# (faq_at_@.@szmyggenpv.com)

Date: 11/15/04

Date: Sun, 14 Nov 2004 18:49:42 -0800

On Sun, 14 Nov 2004 12:21:20 -0500, Percival <dragontamer5788@yahoo.com> wrote:

> The©Wannabee# wrote:

>> On Sun, 14 Nov 2004 10:11:11 -0500, Percival

>> <dragontamer5788@yahoo.com> wrote:

>>

>>> Betov wrote:

>>>

>>>> About "Radiation pollutions of Fission". I have already >>>> answered, that this is a democratic control problem and >>>> not a technical problem. Anyway, this is a _temporary_ >>>> problem, and a temporary solution.

>>>

>>>

>>> Explain how billions of tons of radioactive material that has a >>> half-life of thousands of years is a _temporary_ problem?

>>

>>

>> Send it into a known orbit, that takes that much time until it returns.

>> Then pick up that garbage, and store it in a mountain.

>

> $$$$ 'Nuff Said.

>

> If it was possible, All our garbage would be disposed of like that, > except directly to the sun or moon instead.

What if we did it once every 10 years ? Or 5 ?

> We are eternal, but not of this world. Death brings us elsewhere, and > you would fear it if you have sins on your soul.

No. I have sins on my soul because you tell me I do. From looking at my life, I can explain most of the things I did. I bet this is true for most people.

alt.lang.asm: Re: [OT] Paging Frank K. (was: 'Re: [OT] Why Bush?')

- > lets end this discussion. Experiance says that discussion on this
- > subject brings nothing but flame wars and misunderstandings. These are
- > my principles, and my beliefs. No need to make you involved unless you
- > are interested.

I will happily engage in a philosophical debate with you. I think its the most intriguing of all discussions. Theres are something like 300 religions on this earth, without any scientific proof. This is one of the most interesting aspects of human psychology. And its my believe that nobody stays clear of this one. Even people who have been raised without religion, are strongly affected by it, indirectly, through the laws, the myths, the tales and the history and culture. Religions have without a doubt strongly affected each and everyone of us, either we like to admit it or not. I do not like to admit it. I would give my right hand to know what it would feel like to grow up, totally uninfluenced by religion, just to see what I would be like then. Its my absolutely firm believe, that I would have been a better man without religion, and that my thoughts would have been lighter, and that my science would have been better. And most important of all, I think that my believe in fellow human beeings would have been stronger. Now I must force what comes natural to people unburdened by religious philosophies. This is what I believe.

- > The way I see it, Catholics were spread out too thinnly and too quickly,
- > spreading across the masses that would join Catholics for the historical
- > benifits, including protection of the Pope (he was a very powerful
- > figure in the 1000s–1500s).

I am not deeply familiar with the history of catholicism. My interest field is the human psyche, espesially my own, but also that of my fellow man. I have never could comprehended my fellow beeings, and espesially not christians, or even religious people at large. When it comes to religion the "Faq Attack" on "The Sage" home page is what comes closest to my own understandings.

- > In addition, our Bible has been translated too many times to count, each
- > time loosing the language of the message, and different "Bibles", each
- > with contradictions.

Yes. Much likely.

- > However, I hold the beliefs firm, call it instinct cause I have nothing
- > else to prove it by. I see God in what I do, and what I say, and though
- > others as well. Proof enough for me to stay by my religion.

I see in nature, an intelligence and complexity greater than I can comprehend. When I walk in the mountains outside my house, I can feel awe. I can picture something greater. When I see the pictures of jews graves, from the holocoast, I can see something smaller, something dark. Neither of it makes any sense to me. If there really was a God. Who am I to define it ? I dont even know how to properly define myself. Nobody, obviosly know how to define a God. Because even if there was one, or many, we wouldnt

Re: [OT] Paging Frank K. (was: 'Re: [OT] Why Bush?')

alt.lang.asm: Re: [OT] Paging Frank K. (was: 'Re: [OT] Why Bush?')

know how to properly define them. So the way I see it "we", or humans believe in something that we do not know what is, or isn't. This I have nothing against. What I am against is lying and pretending that we know, and then try to force the things we do not know into the heads of small children that cannot protect themselves, and who are naturally open to grownups, because they need grownups in order to survive.

> Ahh crap, I blabbered again. Try to remind me not to respond. I don't feel like taking/sending any flames this week.

I don't feel like you are blabbering. In fact, I am much interested to know about the happenings that brought you to believe in a religion. If you know, that is. I think it would be very interesting to talk with someone who can argue sensibly, about why they are believers. Because I really like to understand how they can support their beliefs, and sometimes even fight to support it, when it (to me) seems it is founded in blind faith. And contradicted in so many millions of ways. Even by pure logic.

However. I am also a contradictory man. Betov said it best.

>

> Percival

--

Using M2, Opera's revolutionary e-mail client: <http://www.opera.com/m2/>