

///Re: One another trick

///Re: One another trick

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Assembler/alt.lang.asm/2006-11/msg00268.html>

- From: "randyhyde@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx" <randyhyde@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: 3 Nov 2006 10:38:55 -0800
-

KiLVaiDeN wrote:

I generally dislike it when this is done publicly, but you have shown yourself to be a special case, so ...

plonk

Welcome back to the kindergarten !

I guess you don't know what "plonk" means, do you?

Seriously though, you are wrong and you know it, but you keep on replying non-sense, believing you are right; I see no more reason to answer you any further.

And here you go, behaving in the same manner you accuse Thomas.

--
Thomas M. Sommers -- tms@xxxxxxx -- AB2SB

Since you were talking about signatures :
1) Nobody cares of your real life name

///Re: One another trick

///Re: One another trick

Wrong. Some of us prefer the courtesy of using a person's real name in conversation rather than a handle. Some of us believe that people hiding behind a handle are just cowards, who would behave completely differently if they posted messages using their real name.

2) Nobody cares of your email adress, since it should be on your "Reply-To"

Unless, of course, they're not the same. Some people po