

Re: Blair, another one bites the dust !

Re: Blair, another one bites the dust !

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Assembler/alt.lang.asm/2007-07/msg00215.html>

- From: "Ratch" <watchit@xxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Wed, 11 Jul 2007 00:01:04 -0500
-

"Scott Waters" <jascwa@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:ZpydnVUYmvSIywnbnZ2dnUVZ_rqdnZ2d@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Posting into the realm of relatively obscurity: news:alt.lang.asm
And into an even more obscure topic ...

Ratch wrote:

You of all people should be old enough to know that evidence can be subpoenaed by the Congress or a special prosecutor.

Recent events seem to prove that sentence is completely false. Even if executive privilege didn't obstruct justice, the paper, email, and visitor-log shredders surely would.

What events are those? Executive privilege exists for a reason. It can be broken for good cause. Getting rid of evidence to conceal a crime is risky because it can be prosecuted..

Further, I suspect that if the GOP, or Republican HQ, were ever to be effectively probed, I suspect that the RICO Act would be left bursting at the seams. But not to worry, the Democrats are, as usual, inept and incompetent, which is why the GOP is so bold. I think the GOP did get a little nervous after the last elections, hence why Halliburton was planning to move to Dubai. In either case, the Dept. of Justice is just another arm of a very corrupt system.

Not just to GOP. Just about everyone in political power has something to hide. Including the time before the current administration. That's because the fox is watching the hen house. Until a strong independent political investigative bureau (not the FBI) comes into being, it will continue business as usual. The corruption exists in other legislative bodies throughout the world too.

Re: Blair, another one bites the dust !

Re: Blair, another one bites the dust !

Personally, I'd like to resurrect the founding fathers. Especially the ones that lost their lives and the lives of their family members for signing the Declaration of Independence which formed this country. If such a thing were to occur, two things become immediately apparent to me. First, there would be many new construction jobs here in the US. And second, Hemp would become a popular agricultural product. And no, not because you can smoke it (lest ye spin) – many a Schooner was rigged with miles of rope made from Hemp. All those construction projects would need a lot of rope. Then Libby, Powell, Cheney, etc. could have a choice – tell the truth, or face the gallows, with those ropes of Hemp. There's no lack of evidence, just a lack of justice.

Resurrecting someone from 250 years ago is going to do what to solve problems in the present world? Telling lies is not a capital offence. No one is required to testify at his/her trial, so no truth or falsehood need be uttered. Hemp was grown and used during WWII. Trouble is, a field of industrial hemp looks just like a field of drug hemp. It takes a sophisticated lab to tell the difference.

The most concerning issue facing us internally is an election coming up in 2008 with electronic voting machines. For all of you in the technology field, or in the know as it were, how scary is that?

Those problems are well known, and will probably be heavily scrutinized by the losers. Expect recording printers to be required.

Rico Act:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act

Mostly irrelevant because politicians screw you legally. Ratch

Re: Blair, another one bites the dust !