signatures and has lots of C resources. It certainly looks official.

What do you mean, "looks official"?

It has this resources page <http://cpax.org.uk/prg/portable/c/resources.php> that gives the impression it's the official resources page for comp.lang.c though maybe that's just what comes across from the first paragraph.

I'm sure that Richard did not intend to give that impression.

Actually, I'd /love/ to give the impression that my site is "official" in some way, because that would indicate that my Web skills are just as amazing as all my other skills – but apathy always wins out. :-)

From the sidelines, I've been watching this discussion with some amusement, and I saw no particular need to interfere (that cpac political thing was a real eye-opener, btw!), but a word in season seems to be indicated here, so here we go:

Re: Bug in SosMan's getline_test

Anyone who looks at my Web site and genuinely thinks it to be the official comp.lang.c Web site has got to be off his rocker. Completely out to lunch. A brick, two windows, several roofing slates, two teenagers, a loft hatch, and twenty square feet of dry rot short of a house.

Message ends.
