In the end, I think data-aware controls are about pragmatism. They shine in that department!

Well, one can't deny they're a bit like using variants on the pragmatism front: you sacrifice clarity, structure, maintainability and strong typing to get the ability to mess things as you desire, and gain some automagical wonders.

It has the same appeal as VB: no-fuss-gets-things-done, but be ready to cough good money if you want to maintain, evolve, or just get yourself out of the old-fashioned record-based-UI-with-navigator-control paradigm.
