After 23 years as an independent programmer, most of them with Turbo Pascal and Delphi, I'm taking a full-time job, doing straight C on embedded Linux. I start a week from Monday (Jan 22) and will probably stop monitoring the borland newsgroups, as I'll have to find time for a two hour round trip commute.

Good luck. Interesting coincidence. I too start a new gig on the 22nd, at a firm in Colorado. It starts as a Delphi position, but changes over to C++ as they convert and port. However, I doubt there's any Linux in this one. Fortunately I get to work at home for the first six months or so.
