

Re: dev wanted

---

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Java/comp.lang.java.help/2007-02/msg00290.html>

---

- From: "Leonidas Kanakis" <omtmail@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Sun, 11 Feb 2007 19:56:14 +0200
-

"Lew" <lew@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:xKWdnaDYfpkMyVLYnZ2dnUVZ\_uqvnZ2d@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

"Leonidas Kanakis"

..Did my posting provoked you in some way?

Andrew Thompson wrote:

Go buy a clue, then hire yourself a professional recruiter. If this 'pro' offers to drop your job add to the newsgroups, realise they are lying about being a professional, and find someone else.

If, on the other hand, you are the 'job pro', I recommend you give the game up. You are pathetic at it.

* Or at least, it would be 'a' discussion forum if I'd remembered to set the follow-ups as I'd stated in the last post, this time I really /have/ set follow-ups to c.l.j.help.

Bear in mind, Leonidas, that you are not the only one to post to this newsgroup and violate the norms. Many folks post questionable "job offers", and we as professionals have to make a determination as to their legitimacy. Your post looked at first blush like so many that appear on the newsgroups that are pathetic, possibly even fraudulent. How are we supposed to know?

If the poster of the job follows the rules, such as the ones that Andrew mentioned (not multi-posting but cross-posting, understanding that nothing "urgent" happens here, etc.), then we have a sense that they are potentially worthy. If they don't, then your best candidates are going to dismiss your post as bullshit.

Re: dev wanted

If they multi-post, that is, post individually separate messages to multiple groups, we lose respect. Someone we respect would have cross-posted, that is, posted one exact copy across multiple groups the way Andrew did. There is a difference.

You are going to get the leavings, the scrapings, the bottom of the barrel if you do not market your opportunity correctly. Is that truly what you want? If so, then poor you, because stars like