

Re: parse mime

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Java/comp.lang.java/2004-10/0035.html>

From: Edwin Martin (e.j.martin_at_chello.nl)

Date: 10/07/04

Date: Thu, 07 Oct 2004 09:30:49 GMT

Erik Rosenbach wrote:

> Thanks Edwin for the answer, unfortunately it will not be that simple of a > process. What I have to work with is actually about 80K records coming out > of an Oracle database. These records (message bodies) are from an Lyris > News group server and I am porting them into something else. One of the key > problems with the content and the embedded mime is that I have some messages > with multipart headers... for text, html, and for attachments. I'm not > worried about any of the attachments, I just want to scrape the content.
> Not every message is embedded with the mime either. Some of them are plain > text which is fine. The really problematic messages are the messages in > which people have posted the message and replied to. Some of these > messages have long trail of "original message" headers in them as well.
>
> What I would ideally like to find, is a email parser I can passed the > message body to, and have it return to me a only the plain text body.

Ah, I see, that's a little bit more complex.

This functionality might be part of some Mail software/API.

Maybe you can find a solution here:

http://java.sun.com/products/javamail/Third_Party.html

Edwin Martin.

--

<http://www.bitstorm.org/>