

Re: About GUI and lisps...

---

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Lisp/comp.lang.lisp/2006-09/msg00930.html>

---

- From: goose <lkman-spamtrap@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Mon, 11 Sep 2006 00:24:26 +0200
-

MarkHaniford@xxxxxxxxxx wrote:

goose wrote:

MarkHaniford@xxxxxxxxxx wrote:
<snipped>

Gnome has already made their decision, and any belly-aching on your part is irrelevant.

"Pointing out that it /might/ be counter-productive" is not "belly-aching".

You "suggested" ,or rather was trying to tell people how they should feel about Mono.

Please show me where I told people how to feel about mono?
You are just being silly now, looking for an argument that isn't there.

I'm not knocking those who use

.net nor did I knock the gnome people, I'm just pointing out that it has a sword hanging over it's head.

Re: About GUI and lisps...

The "sword hanging over it's head" is true for everybody because of software patents. If you write a thousand lines of code and someone with patents feels threatened by it, you might have a sword hanging over your head.

True; However considering microsofts usual behaviour (like, with FAT) there is no reason to believe that the same thing won't happen with mono. C# may be ecma standardised, but that didn't prevent microsoft from applying for (and getting granted) extremely broad and vague .net specific patents in 2002.

Most people would rather get out of bed in the morning though, instead of hiding under the covers.

No need to be defensive.

I have no interest in what happens to Gnome. You are the one that was bitter enough about the whole thing to go on an offtopic rant with your "suggestion" on how others should feel about it, which is odd, since you have no influence.

?

I made an observation[1] and you readily jumped in to display your ignorance. How is that my fault?

My word! Grow up already. Stop being so overly sensitive.

[1] One that you would have to *really* twist to see it as "bitter". Doubly so to view it as "telling others how to feel". Don't read between the lines, read what I wrote.

—

goose

Have I offended you? Send flames to root@localhost real email: lelanthran at gmail dot com
website : www.lelanthran.com

.

Re: About GUI and lisps...