

Re: "beta" is a reach, but....

Source: <http://coding.derkeiler.com/Archive/Lisp/comp.lang.lisp/2008-08/msg00166.html>

- From: Kenny <kentilton@xxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 05 Aug 2008 18:51:15 -0400
-

Joost Kremers wrote:

Kenny wrote:

I am not sure then how people get excited about the first version by arguing about web page point size.

mmm. since you seem rather hung up on this,...

It's me who is hung up on this? Excuse me....

AAUAUGGHHHRHRGHAAUAUARGRGHHH!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Thanks for waiting.

let me explain why i brought it up. (though TBH i thought it would be obvious...) personally, if i am considering spending my money on some piece of software, the first place i look is the company's/program's homepage.

Actually, one of the things I have had to learn is to lose that attitude. Oh, god, I cannot ship it like this, I have to ask the operating system how fast to blink the caret in the math editor. No, I don't. (But I did, I had not learned.) That is something definitely to get round to, but in its right prioritized order.

Most critics never consider that every enterprise has finite resources, they just pound their criticizee with any fault they can spot, an activity for which they have infinite resources it seems.

Most critics also forget they are talking to someone who might have just spent a year or five on producing something with a lot of substance and that it is fine to offer helpful advice (which is exactly how I took yours) but expect smoke from ears if that is /all/ you can say.

As for home pages, you have not seen the competition: