oh... so I've got more information for myself...which in effect makes it easier for other people to answer:

```
//fwrite($fh,$result_areaVN');
//fflush($fh);

is something I might have to do. This takes the query and flushes it into the fh file...(filehandle)... usually though, a string is put into fh...not an entire array of area information...which when printed looks like tons of numbers seperated by comma's.
